Baltimore, Md. – On January 4, 2008, Design Collective relocated their North Carolina office to the Noell Building in the American Tobacco Historic District in Durham. Design Collective's new office will occupy 3,300 square feet on the first floor. The relocation is the direct response to the company's consistent growth and will enable Design Collective to continue to build its reputation as exceptional designers and planners of higher education, institutional, civic, corporate, transportation, retail, hospitality, residential and urban mixed-use projects.

“Design Collective has expanded significantly over the last three years and this larger regional office will help us better serve our growing client base in the Southeast,” said Rich Burns, senior partner with Design Collective.
